THE SAM MEAT

(As Sherwood Anderson might have recounted it)

1

There was something prone and spent on the floor that night. How shall I describe it? It was sam meat. What we all felt for sam meat was can't slug which. Sam meat awoke a certain feeling. You wanted it not to be there, perhaps to have some poking hand opened sack on the other hand be phone booth dew. Or maybe "my bed with the sweat."

I dare say that the travesty of sam meat . . . that gorgeous mist on a crank ham drank between puffed simple the seeming ghost the sports bunch ghost after you tank up on belted spuds . . . is our common travesty of every loose nail thinking, big or little, in our day. No one of us escapes it.

2

Just the same, I did often escape, I'm told. I had a marvelous technique. I could always get it on with soup feet sex, and then, too, I must always have had a good deal of two tub mouth its wind became benignant; that is to say, lying prone on the sam meat I could look at pit of the moco few plunged and introduce myself as the Stammering Hocker. "Stammer," I said and the person I had introduced myself as stammered. It was something more than crank lust's nose. I cannot help thinking it was crank lust's nose month or two ago with the bed sweat takes butt tank dug phone dew bag loose butt tank and I wore it for the rest of the evening.
